The Barbara Sinatra Children's Center at Eisenhower is considered a national model in the treatment of child sexual, physical and emotional abuse.

Barbara Sinatra Children's Center at Eisenhower is considered a national model in the treatment of child sexual, physical and emotional abuse. Founded in 1986 by Frank and Barbara Sinatra, the center is dedicated to breaking the cycle of abuse through programs of prevention, public education and psychological treatment for victims and affected family members. The Barbara Sinatra Children's Center treats boys and girls of all ages – from as young as 18 months, up to age 18. Other childhood emotional problems treated at the center include self-esteem problems, self-assertiveness management and family crisis intervention. When the Center opened, Mr. and Mrs. Sinatra promised that no child who looks to the center for help will be turned away due to inability to pay for treatment. The center annually treats more than 700 young victims and their family members, 90 percent of whom are below poverty levels.

Betty Ford Center at Eisenhower is a separately licensed 154-bed recovery hospital that offers inpatient and outpatient treatment for men and women, 18 years and older, who suffer from alcohol and other drug dependencies. Named in honor of the former First Lady, the world-renowned center, which opened in 1982, has helped more than 60,000 people from all 50 states and more than 30 foreign countries begin their recovery from substance abuse. Specialized treatment services are also provided for licensed professionals, and for co-dependent adults and children through the Family Program and the Children's Program. All family members are deeply affected when one family member is chemically dependent. Family members are offered support and education through the five-day Family Program. The center also offers a Children's Program for children ages 7 to 12 who are not themselves addicted, but are living with chemically dependent family members. The Professionals-in-Residence training program allows individuals in other helping professions to experience the process of treatment, attend special lectures and learn to make better referrals when needed.
